

Table of contents

Thursday 29 August 2019	1
-------------------------------	---

IUAES 2019 Inter-Congress “World Solidarities”

Thursday 29 August 2019

Morality, research, and the refugee crisis: P 33.1 - Morasko Kampus, room: 3.19 (11:00-12:45)

Room 3.19 Moral anthropology, aimed at studying the „moral making of the world” (Fassin, 2012), is a growing subfield of anthropological and ethnological sciences. Among other issues, moral anthropology addresses debates about values and emotions, moral duty and ethical freedom, and human rights and humanitarianism, including the responsibility of the researcher and the legal regulation of research in such undertakings. The European “refugee crisis,” a term used to discuss the increased numbers of migrants arriving - by boats or overland - in the European Union beginning in 2015, is often considered a crisis of European response to the conflict in Syria and the resulting humanitarian crisis at the borders of Europe. The convenors would like to create a space to discuss the role of moral values in the „refugee crisis,” the integration challenges upon arrival in Europe, as well as anthropological research opportunities, limits and risks involved in studying people and social phenomena during humanitarian crises. We invite researchers to address such topics as: - humanitarian responses to refugee crises - residents’ solidarity with immigrants - conflicts over religious and secular values in relation to migration - moral, social, and political responsibilities of researchers, activists, and politicians - morality and moral values from different disciplinary perspectives in the social sciences and the humanities.

- Conveners: Dr. Main, Izabella; Dr. Suter, Brigitte; Ms. Kujawa, Izabela

time	title	presenter
11:00	Hip hop and refugees in Poznań, Poland	ADAMOWICZ, Anna
11:20	Outsiders' ethic. How to take a humanitarian stance from a distance?	RAPIOR, Waldemar
11:40	Conducting fieldwork on norms and values in the field of integration after ‘the refugee crisis’: early reflections from Poland and Sweden	SUTER, Brigitte
12:00	Syrian victims or Gypsy thieves: Racializing migrant inclusion on the Parisian periphery.	SHAH, Henry

Morality, research, and the refugee crisis: P 33.2 - Morasko Kampus, room: 3.19 (15:30-17:15)

Room 3.19 Moral anthropology, aimed at studying the „moral making of the world” (Fassin, 2012), is a growing subfield of anthropological and ethnological sciences. Among other issues, moral anthropology addresses debates about values and emotions, moral duty and ethical freedom, and human rights and humanitarianism, including the responsibility of the researcher and the legal regulation of research in such undertakings. The European “refugee crisis,” a term used to discuss the increased numbers of migrants arriving - by boats or overland - in the European Union beginning in 2015, is often considered a crisis of European response to the conflict in Syria and the resulting humanitarian crisis at the borders of Europe. The convenors would like to create a space to discuss the role of moral values in the „refugee crisis,” the integration challenges upon arrival in Europe, as well as anthropological research opportunities, limits and risks involved in studying people and social phenomena during humanitarian crises. We invite researchers to address such topics as: - humanitarian responses to refugee crises - residents' solidarity with immigrants - conflicts over religious and secular values in relation to migration - moral, social, and political responsibilities of researchers, activists, and politicians - morality and moral values from different disciplinary perspectives in the social sciences and the humanities.

- Conveners: Dr. Main, Izabella; Dr. Suter, Brigitte; Ms. Kujawa, Izabela

time	title	presenter
15:30	Between Religion and Morality: Cases of Conversion to Christianity in Austrian Borderlands	JU KIM, Dong
15:50	Money to be distributed: Following financial aid for Syrian refugees in Istanbul	TOPCU, Sena